

---

The authors

Goran Buldioski (co-ordination, writing). currently educational adviser working in the European Youth Centre Budapest. His particular interests include human resource development, organisational management, training of trainers and intercultural education in general. goran.buldioski@coe.int

Cecilia Grimaldi (writing). Cecilia is Italian, with a background in political science specialising in international studies. She has worked as a stagiaire and as an external consultant at the EYC Strasbourg assisting some seminars and writing a study paper on rural youth. She worked for 4 years as Field Executive Trainer for Europe Region WAGGGS assisting the National Guide and Scout Organisation in Europe in setting up, implementing, evaluating and updating their training practices. Her main areas of work are intercultural learning and teamwork, training for trainers, project management and development education. She is currently a freelance trainer. Cecilia is also a certified Hata Yoga teacher of Iyengar Yoga, and at the time of this publication she is moving to Paris. Cecilia firmly believes that working with and for European youth is an investment in peace and happiness for tomorrow. cgrimaldi@iol.it

Sonja Mitter (writing): Sonja is working as a freelance trainer and consultant in the field of European youth work and co-operation. She is German and currently living in Ljubljana, Slovenia. Her main areas of interest include intercultural learning, intercultural team work, project management, training for trainers, Euro-Mediterranean co-operation and youth work in and with South East Europe. From 1995 until 2000, she worked as a member of the educational team at the Directorate of Youth and Sport of the Council of Europe in Strasbourg. Her background is in history with a focus on migration issues. sonjamitter@aol.com

Gavan Titley (writing, editing, proof-reading). Gavan is researching a PhD at Dublin City University, analysing cultural globalization and development. He has taught there and for Boston University. As a trainer he is a member of the trainers pool of both the Directorate of Youth and Sports and the Youth Forum, and also works free-lance. His main interests include intercultural learning and globalisation, the social role of the media, development education, conflict transformation and training for trainers. He currently lives in Helsinki, where he is a visiting researcher actively applying experiential learning to sauna culture. gavan.titley@dcu.ie

Georges Wagner (writing, design). From Northern Luxembourg, Georges has a professional background as a psychologist and organisational consultant, and naturally as a trainer and facilitator in the intercultural youth field. Based in Germany, he works as a free-lance intercultural trainer and team consultant in different European and African countries for profit and non-profit organisations. He also works part-time at the Heinrich-Böll-Foundation in Berlin as the senior officer of the joint task Migration and is responsible for an interior organisational development process in intercultural management. His main points of interests are structural and personal racism, multicultural society, and intercultural management.

As a passionate cook he constantly develops his 'world kitchen' and tries to keep his interior child alive. And he is the proud father of our crocodiles. docwag@gmx.net